Robbert Marcel Snijders : Broken Wings before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Broken Wings:

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. love itBy Mimi RoeauI love this story. It's always a fun book to read when I have time to relax. I wish Moonlight was on Kindle too!!1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Character driven storyBy MaaralI really like this author. Most everything she writes is from one person's point of view. The plot and conflict revolve around individuals personalities and motives.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy Matthew N.great book

Inspired by true events, "Broken Wings" tells the story of an American Captain of a Bomber Group based in England, who is falsely accused of taking part of a piece of fiction about him shooting down one of Luftwaffe's top fighter at twenty thousand feet above sea level, using only his sidearm to make the kill and finds himself returning home, not a war hero, but stigmatized to the point where his life falls apart - he's discharged by the army and blacklisted by the community where he lives with his family. When his two boys are being harassed at school his already fragile marriage falls apart. He finds jobs away from home waiting for an opportunity to clean his name. This comes with a letter from an old friend telling him about a salvage operation taking place on the Elbe River where the enemy fighter went down. He travels to Germany and with the help of a local free lance reporter he discovers the hard evidence that will redeem him once and for all, not without facing some serious life threats.

From the AuthorThis book is not literary fiction. It's not going to change your life or help you find religion, but it might entertain you for a few hours if you just want a fun read full of smut and magic and drama, and yes, most of the characters in this story are horny young men in a world where casual sex is normal, even expected. If that doesn't sound to your liking, to each their own and have a wonderful day.
From the Inside FlapThe tall faerie caught sight of Jak and stopped, a surprised look on his face. Then he smiled. His short, feathery hair was brilliant purple, his eyes a striking shade of blue-lavender, highlighted by thick black eyeliner and glittery gold eye shadow. He was bare-chested, his skin pale, creamy, glistening with sweat along his collarbone and down the middle of his stomach to the waist of his unbuttoned jeans. "Hi," the faerie said, stepping further into the room. "You must be Maika's new roommate." Jak glanced at the faerie on the bed--Maika, apparently. He had pulled his shirt closed again to hide his wounds. "I'm Akitra." "Jakil," Jak said, offering his hand. "Most people just call me Jak." "Nice to meet you, Jak," Akitra said. He started to reach out, but hesitated. "You're a...Were, right?" "A mage," Jak said and Akitra pulled his hand back. "Not that I have anything against mages," Akitra said with a warm smile. "I'm an ainmhain sidhe." "Oh." Jak let his hand fall back to his side. A lust faerie. He had heard about them--what mage hadn't--but he'd never actually met one before.
About the AuthorI learned at a young age that books were precious and that the written word was a powerful means of communication. Since I have social anxiety and find it hard to speak to people, writing has become my voice. I'm able to say what I really think and feel without the irrational worry that comes with speaking. I grew up and still live in Oregon, in the beautiful Willamette Valley. I'm within walking distance of the Willamette River, and a couple hours' drive from both the coast and the mountains. Since writing doesn't pay the bills yet, I also work for the school district as an educational assistant. I love camping, hiking, bird watching, and rock-hounding and spend my free time writing, reading, or watching TV, movies, and sporting events. I'm a huge football, bullriding, and NASCAR fan. I've been writing stories since I was ten, and in all these years, the one constant in my writing has always been the magic, the supernatural, the inexplicable. Nothing inspires me like fantasy, be it dragons or vampires, faeries or demons. I'm fascinated by human interaction, probably because I'm so bad at it, and few things in life bring out the raw intensity of human emotion like love and sex. Even when writing about faeries or demons or fantasy cultures, the needs are universal. Love is love, no matter what planet you're on. Love is not the domain of the rich, or the powerful, or the beautiful. It belongs to everyone and that's why I enjoy writing erotica. The fact that guy-on-guy action is really hot doesn't hurt, either.
