A large coffee table book filled with photos and artwork, alongside a month-by-month chronology. This history of Film starts in 1894 with the pioneers of the art in France and England. There are countless color reproductions of posters, and BW/color stills from the movies, articles on film releases, actors and directors (both famous and forgotten), the movie industry itself, and technological changes. The first 200 pages alone are dedicated to the Silent Era. International films are given plenty of attention too.3 of 4 people found the following review helpful. From School Library JournalYA?An exhaustive overview of cinema's first 100 years. Over 3000 posters, portraits, and stills illustrate countless film facts, developments, and highlights in a clear, year-by-year format. Concise and easily accessible lists combine with captivating reviews to entice readers to roam throughout this volume. Casual browsers, film fans, and students will delight in this extensive history.?Sue Callahan, R.E. Lee High School, Springfield, VACopyright 1995 Reed Business Information, Inc.From Library JournalThis entry in the Dorling Kindersly "Chronicle" series is the most beautiful of the recent histories of the moving picture's first century. Within nine sections, each year begins with a page of significant events and a full-page photo or stunningly reproduced poster. Ensuing pages include black-and-white and color photos with text and smaller posters. In eight relatively brief special essays (covering sound, studios, color, Academy Awards, cameras, hit movies, music, and special effects), a great deal of information is covered in an even-handed manner. No genre is shortchanged; the international scene is covered; most, if not all, major stars and directors receive their due. General and film indexes make all this information easily accessible. For scholars it may be just a refresher, while for others, it will work as a handsome introduction. For both it will be an aesthetic delight. Public and school libraries will find it well worth the price.Kim Holston, American Inst. for Chartered Property Casualty Underwriters, Malvern, Pa.Copyright 1995 Reed Business Information, Inc.From BooklistLike its predecessors (Chronicle of the Twentieth Century, Dorling, 1987; Chronicle of America, 2d. ed., Dorling, 1995; and Chronicle of the World, ECAM, 1990), this narrative time line of notable cinemagraphic events is written in a present-tense journalistic style. Film critic Karney leads a team of editors who present a tremendous amount of information in short, easily accessible articles. The broad scope and international focus here are sure to attract browsers and researchers alike.Coverage begins in 1894 and goes through March 1995. Essays introduce each decade, (e.g., "The Silent Era," "Movies Find a Voice," "War and After," "The New Wave"). The format for each year features a chronology of notable events, births, and deaths. Academy Award winners are listed beginning in 1929. A series of newspaper-type articles report on all aspects of the motion-picture industry: celebrities, theaters, mergers, technical developments, legislation, fashion, and gossip. Sample articles from 1917 include a story on how Charlie Chaplin's films are keeping up morale on the front; others describe how the German film industry is moving towards nationalization, censorship in the French film industry, Paramount Studios, Tom Mix, and Theda Bara. Photographs and illustrations are generously strewn throughout the text, some full page, many in color. A spread of posters and stills from each year's biggest hits creates a visual overview.Along with a great deal of information on the American and British film industries, which is readily available in a number of other sources, are updates on developments in Italy, Russia, Spain, Algeria, Egypt, Japan, and Mexico. Some examples: on May 5, 1913, the four-reel religious epic, Raja Harishchandra, debuted in Bombay, and in 1993, Farewell My Concubine became the first Hong Kong entry ever to win the Cannes Golden Palm Award. Early films featuring all African American casts, such as King Vidor's 1929 Hallelujah, are also documented. Individual editors contributed eight essays on sound, the studio system, color and wide-screen techniques, the Academy Awards, cameras, box-office hits, movie music, and special effects. Two indexes--one general, one for film titles--provide access.A foreword by Gene Siskel and lavish illustrations will attract patrons, especially young adults. Reference librarians will appreciate the amount of information located in one source. Some libraries may want to consider both circulating and reference copies.
