A treasureBy Jim AndrewsHaving grown up in St. Louis in the 1940s and been on radio, and been at the KMOX studios and listened to the station every day of my life, this certainly is the book I have been waiting for. Frank Absher has done a wonderful job of research, interviewing, organizing and writing. Almost anything anyone would want to know about KMOX is here and told in vivid detail, which a particularly great eye at the people involved and their personality, and the station's unique dynamics. The photos are wonderful and cover a wide span of eras beautifully. High recommended.1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Lots of the entertainers were like family membersBy JUDthis book is so special to me. My Aunt and Uncle are pictured in the book. Lots of the entertainers were like family members. wish that I could get in touch with the Author.....I have many pictures that he could use or could be in the history of Kmox0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy Scott I SpiegelGreat photos, history commentary

Since it signed on the air on December 24, 1925, KMOX has literally been the "Voice of St. Louis," a pace setter for the radio industry. That positioning statement perfectly described the station and its mission. Through the years, KMOX listeners have heard hillbilly music, local drama, award-winning news, soap operas, bedtime voices in the night, sports play-by-play, call-in talk shows, local editorials, world leaders, local events, and announcers who were perceived as friends of the family. In radio's heyday, hundreds of CBS network programs heard around the nation originated from the Mart Building studios of KMOX. The station has won every major broadcast award imaginable, directly reflecting its influence and local dominance. For many years, St. Louis's KMOX was tops in the nation in radio market share, and the studios were regularly visited by international radio executives to study the station's success.

About the AuthorAuthor Frank Absher is a former announcer on KMOX who began assembling St. Louis media history in 1987. In 2011, he founded the St. Louis Media History Foundation, a not-for-profit organization dedicated to gathering and preserving St. Louis media history.
