The author is a young man of 18 years old who had to leave his home in Jerusalem and find work for a few years in Cyprus and from there to work for about 40 years with the BBC Arabic section in many aspects of broadcasting and journalism . It is too bad they let him go after so many years without due respect and recognition and a pension. Ironically the state that helped drive him out of his home did not see it fit to treat him fairly at the end of his long years of honest hard work for the BBC, British Broadcasting Corporation!.

When you are behind the BBC microphone, nobody knows whether you are a member of staff, or a freelancer. While on the other side, listeners and certain journalists may assess you better than officials, such as a Jordanian sports editor, who credited me for making the British football clubs and players more popular and favourites than local clubs and players. I started my career in Near East Arab Broadcasting Station, founded by the British and buried on order from London, at the height of its fame, while most of its listeners thought it was financed by Arabs, which was why it was a sort of taboo to talk about it in Parliament. This is my broadcasting journey for almost 60 years, starting as a studio manager, before becoming a news reader, presenter, producer, writer, football and tennis commentator. That was not achieved in an easy way. How the obstacles were surmounted, together with stories never revealed before, including a very generous gift from a royal prince, are unfolded in this book.
